    <h2>Introduction</h2>

    <h3>Early life</h3>

        In 1986, four years old Iqbal Masih was caught in a cycle of poverty and debt.
        His father borrowed 600 Pakistani rupees from a carpet factory owner to help pay for his eldest son's wedding. In return, Iqbal was sent to work for the carpet maker to repay the loan.

        But Iqbal's work did not make the debt disappear but interest and other charges caused the debt to grow instead to 13,000 rupees. He worked for 14 to 16 hours with little food and water. If he made a mistake he was beaten. If he got tired he was shouted at and tied by ropes so he could not run away.

    <h3>Escape from bonded labour</h3>

        For years, Iqbal lived as a bonded child labourer. Then, around the age of ten, he escaped and became involved with the Bonded Labour Liberation Front (BLLF).
        Instead of remaining silent, he began speaking publicly about child labour and helping other children seek freedom.

    <h3>Recognition</h3>

        In 1994, his activism received international recognition when he was given the Reebok Human Rights Youth in Action Award.

    <h3>His death and legacy</h3>

        On April 16, 1995, Iqbal was shot and killed in Muridke. He was only twelve.
        The circumstances and motive surrounding his killing were never conclusively established.
